

The invention relates to a device for the control of gas flow in air conditioning systems. The device comprises a two part housing for a damper element. The two parts are identical provided with male and female interconnection elements.