

The proposed electronic package contains a sealed casing with covers, which is made of current-conducting and heat-conducting material, a connector, and several screened sealed units with unpackaged chips. The chips of each unit are installed at a printed circuit board, which is fixed to a heat-conducting partition that separates the casing into two sections. The connector with pins is installed in the corresponding receptacle of the casing.