

The invention relates to medicine, in particular to a method for blocking internal fixation device. The method consists in passing of guide pin at place of planned insertion of locking screw at right angle to the bone axis, further connection with it in medullar channel of fixation device forked end until it butts against the pin. The base of the fixation device has an opening, and the locking screw is inserted instead of the pin.