

The invention relates to the induction method for cell differentiation which consists in injecting peptide derivatives having the following general formula (I): and used as a differentiation-inducing factor. Said peptide derivatives are used for curing oncological diseases, in particular for stabilising melanoma growth, increasing the efficiency of melanoma immunotherapy and reducing haematological toxicity of chemotherapy. The utilisation of said peptide derivatives is also disclosed.