

A device for long-term keeping and supply of drinking water includes collection tank for water with inlet and outlet mains, indicator of water level in collection tank and control block. The device additionally includes temperature indicator connected to control block, heating block and block for water cooling. At that collection tank is made heat-insulated. The invention provides long-term keeping of drinking water without use of conservation agents with preservation of its initial properties.