

The invention relates to a security element for security documents, bank notes, identity cards, or the like. Said security element comprises a substrate on which at least two metallic layers having different optical densities are arranged.