

The present invention refers to a model of gas cooker burner of improved type, which features a cap with a lower border situated near the notched crown of the border immediately above the section from which the mixture comes out and goes through the notches of the crown, which is provided with an external annular groove along the edge of the upper border.