

The invention relates to engineering of determination of physical-mechanical characteristics of materials. Device for rheological studies includes torsion pendulum arranged as equipped with inertial load springy shaft one end of which is in vessel for material under investigation. The last one is placed in working cavity of solenoid of generator of pulse magnetic field. Technical result is in possibility of investigation of powder materials with simultaneous attribution of qualitatively new physical properties to those.