

Is disclosed a traction body of twin-chain rake conveyor, which includes two round link chains connected in a single loop from short round link chains with scrapers located between them and connected with chains by connecting links and bolts with nuts; moreover the connecting links are made in the form of the round link chain, in which one side of component is disconnected and bent out in such a way that it forms extended legs, which are connected with the ends of scraper. In the case over the internal surfaces of link the links of round link chains are located, and two round link chains 20 m long and more are connected by brackets, which are installed on the links of round link chains and are connected by bolts and nuts.