

Method for development of benches includes formation with a separate face, in the whole width of the cut, a site inclined in direction of horizontal working site of the bench, with following formation, along the width of the cut, of a temporary working site, with raising with respect to the level of the horizontal working site of the bench, with development of the cut rock from that temporary working site; after that one develops the rocks of the bench placed under the temporary working site with formation of the level of horizontal working site, this provides development of benches with height exceeding the allowed height of excavator ladling out.