

The proposed method for determining average gas temperature at a gas pipeline section consists in measuring the gas temperature and gas flow rate at the start of the section, measuring the gas pressure at the start and end of the section, and determining the average gas temperature by using the corresponding expression and the iterative calculation procedure.