

A transformer core comprises at least one leg and at least one yoke pan, wherein the cross section of the leg or the legs is regularly multi-edged with more than four edges. The core is made up of rings rolled from strips of constant width, whereby good electrical properties are achieved. The transformer is also easy to manufacture and avoids waste of material.

