

The proposed switch and switch unit relate to power electronic devices. The switch unit contains two power switches, a capacitor, and an autotransformer. The switching of the power switches occurs at instants when voltage across the switches is zero, independently from the load current. The increased number of the switches in the switch unit provides a possibility to increase ripple frequency of the load voltage without changing the switching frequency of the switches.