

A respirator consists of a filtering semi-mask with a hood, a clamp for the nose, a breathing valve, and a spreader made with the possibility of its rigid attachment to the breathing valve. To improve the operating characteristics, the spreader is designed web-like thinning in the longitudinal ends. The spreader is placed between the filtering material and the external layer.