

The invention relates to a flat support, with at least one semiconductor chip, which is linked to an antenna for exchange of data and energy with an electronic device. The antenna comprises two electrical conductors and a conducting layer on the support overlaps the electrical conductors of the antenna. A large capacitive coupling between the electronic device and the flat support (Transponder) is thus achieved.

