

The proposed method for verifying time and frequency standards that are spatially separated consists in using the time and frequency standard signals that are transmitted with television broadcast signals and received in the meteor-scatter communication channel. The length of the said channel is determined with consideration for data on the meteor trail obtained at the receiving station.