

A method for the preparation of purging gas to be utilized in the production of acetic acid, which method involves purification of purging gas by means of absorption with acetic acid at the temperature of no more than 30 °C in the environment of a high pressure and water in the environment of a low pressure.