

Silane is produced in a continuous process by the disproportionation of trichlorosilane in at least 2 reaction areas through which vapour and liquid flow in counter-current, by means of reaction/distillation on catalytically active solid matter under a pressure which ranges between 500 mbar and 50 bar.