

The receiving cartridge for the hip prosthesis contains the softening element in the areas of its internal surface exposed to the increased pressure. The softening element is designed as a figured pad of the varying depth made of low-molecular silicone. The depth of the pad in the areas of the increased pressure depends on the load.