

The proposed device for monitoring charging of accumulator batteries can be used in mining or motor-car industry and is designed for maintaining accumulator batteries in charged state. The device automatically disconnects the battery from the charging current source when the battery is fully charged and automatically connects the battery to the charging current source after the discharge.