

A method for treatment of fiber material includes effecting those in water medium by pulse electric discharges. At that the pulse electric discharges are formed as developed streamer crowns and as water medium one uses water solution of electrolyte activated through membrane electrolysis. The process of treatment is carried out in two stages, first in anolyte, and then in catholyte.