

A method of making a feed protein additive from wastes of a raw material of animal origin such that treatment under pressure is carried out forestalling the thermal treatment which is started after growing the volume weight of the raw material.

A device for carrying out the method contains an extruder with a cylinder, a loading area is made as non-heated one, a screw site of which is at the beginning of the heated area, is equipped with a supporting element.