

The proposed device for testing and measuring the insulation resistance of an electric apparatus contains a direct voltage source that is connected to the control terminals of the apparatus. The present invention provides the possibility to measure the insulation resistance under the operating voltage of the apparatus independently of fluctuations of the mains voltage.