

A divider contains elements being divided connected by weakened component and an actuator for dividing the weakened component. The actuator is located in the weakened component and is made in the form of an airtight cavity filled with electro-conductive liquid, in which electrodes connected with the source (generator) of pulse current for creating the electric-hydraulic effect are installed.