

A device for production of a food extruded product with filling by means of improvement the construction of separating and output matrices, as a result of which the delivery of a plasticized product through passing channels of the separating matrix takes place as flows, which converge to an accumulating chamber, forming the homogenous mass of this product in front of a draw plate of the output matrix is provided.