

The invention relates to the chemical and pharmaceutical industry, in particular, to the method for producing the antineoplastic drug in the form of the injectable solution. According to the method, vincristin sulfate, sodium metabisulphite, and citric acid are dissolved in the water for injections. Separately, benzilic alcohol is dissolved in polyethylene glycol. The solutions are mixed and the volume is adjusted with the water for injections.