

This invention relates to a false ceiling, constituted by a taut sheet fastened, along its edges, to a support fixed to the walls of a room, this support being constituted by a continuous rail presenting a shoulder on which is fastened a border of the sheet, in the form of a hook or "harpoon".