

The invention concerns a process for exothermic heterogeneous synthesis in which the synthesis gas flows over a series of catalytic beds superimposed but separate one from the other contained within the same reaction space, all the reacted gas collects in the central zone of the last lower catalytic bed and from here it flows upwards to the top of said space inside which its heat is exchanged and steam is produced.