

A device of magnetic retention of molten metal from leakage contains an electro-conductive coil connected with a magnetic core. The invention relates to the production of light sheet by pouring melt into the clearance between continuously rotating rolls.