

Appliance for transfer of pressure from one flow of fluid medium to another one has body with inlet and outlet branch pipes for each flow of fluid medium. The inlet and outlet branch pipes are arranged with cavities that are permanently connected to the channel of the rotor during its turn by approximately 180° . The invention relates to machine-building, deals with improvement of wave pressure exchangers and can be used for supercharge of combustion engines.