

The invention relates to the field of cleaning grain products, in particular, to the methods of separation of normal good grains of cereal crops from the grains affected by fusariose, weevil, storehouse and grain moth, and also by other pests, which break the structure of the shell of grain and can be used in food and groats industries. A method is implemented by grain separation.