

Method for measurement of magnetic field strength is based on transformation of magnetic field to electric voltage by means of receiving coil and processing of signal obtained. Transformation of magnetic field strength is performed at temperature of environment, and preliminary processing of signal is performed under conditions of superconductivity. The invention relates to measuring engineering and can be used for measurement of weak alternating magnetic fields.