

The invention relates to the field of agriculture and forestry. A method to cultivate natural renovation of a slopy forest includes loosening the soil around germinating seedlings and removing competing plants. For each sapling selected to replenish plantations a terrace-like ground with sloping water-bringing furrows on sides thereof which are filled up with fallen fir-needle and foliage is formed.