

An invention relates to water purification from surfactants and intended mainly for the purification of potable water in everyday life and in industry for the production of drinks.

The installation comprises column, in the bottom of which air distributor is fixed, and inside the inlet nozzle, in the lower part of which socket is fixed for collection of air bubbles with absorbed substances.