

The invention relates to ferrous metallurgy, namely to submelting heat-insulating mixes used for pouring steel under slag layer and warming of a head part of an ingot, produced by pouring steel in casting molds. The heat-insulating mix contains fly ash and carbon-containing filling material. As carbon-containing filling material the mix contains state coal.