

The invention relates to measuring engineering and can be used as basic device for formation of series of radiometric devices operating from any types of indicators with pulse output, with possibility of issue of information in any needed standard measuring units. Digital intensity measuring device has decoder outputs of which are connected to first group of inputs of digital indicator and inputs are connected to outputs of bits of first counter.