

The invention relates to the pharmaceutical industry, namely to the method for preparing the biologically active substances from the herbal raw material to be administered as the medicinal substances in the diseases of the liver and the bile ducts. The method provides for the extraction of the milk thistle with ethanol, the stripping of the extract, the purification with 50% ethanol, the elimination of the lipids with carbon tetrachloride, the extraction with chloroform-ethanol mixture, the second stripping, the dissolution in ethanol, the concentration to the dry residue, and the grinding.