

The invention relates to the design of the devices used for removal of solid deposits from internal surfaces of the conduits of the systems of water supply and water drain, and it can be used in many fields of industry and municipal service system. An air-operated chuck contains a housing with a partition, from one side of which a cylinder with inclined basic drain nozzles is located and a differential piston is installed in it.