

The invention relates to the technological processes used at removal of solid deposits from the systems of water supply and water separation, and it can be used in many fields of industry and municipal service system. A method consists in that in the liquid, which fills a conduit, shock waves are generated for pulses of compressed air for cyclic action by two waves with time shift of their action on each section of deposits subject to destruction.