

The invention relates to the machine-tool construction and can be used in different fields of machine building, where the precise and high-quality grinding of round external and internal surfaces of wide nomenclature of components is required, for example, in tool production. An universal plain grinding machine contains a bed with upper and lower tables, on which front rotary and tail blocks are placed with possibility of reinstallation.