

A method for treatment of children suffering from bronchial asthma with the high level of organism sensitization is carried out with the use of speleotherapy in the artificial environment of the finely divided sodium chloride aerosol. Additionally prior to speleotherapy the irradiation of the area of thymus projection is carried out with the helium-neon laser. The invention relates to medicine, in particular to pulmonology and may be wide use for treatment of patients with bronchial asthma.