

The invention relates to machine building, namely to the construction of traction double-hinged rolling chain for conveyors. A double-hinged rolling chain includes forked components with openings for the axles of rollers. The components are made from two parts connected together, each of which has an arched groove, which forms an opening for one of the axles of rollers at connection of parts.