

The electrical machine stator comprises the case with longitudinal tightening edges whereon the core consisting of segments made of electric steel with grooves for windings is burdened and divided for stacks with radial venting channels. The utmost stacks are regularly distributed along their segment layer thickness without radial slotted tooth groups made of high-impact nonmagnetic material. The invention relates to electrical machine building and can be used in turbo-generators.