

A solenoid valve comprises an electromagnetic coil wound on the hub of a bobbin of a plastic material, a metallic central core disposed in the hub of the bobbin, the core forming an axial conduit, and an armature which can be displaced by electromagnetic forces axially towards an end of the said axial conduit in order to control the flow of gas in the said conduit.