

An invention concerns devices for the diffused-air aeration of liquids and can be used, particularly in wastewater purification in aeration constructions.

The diffused-air aerator contains supporting element in a form of cylindrical pipe one end of which is made open, and a layer of a porous polymer material, saturated with a hardening material.