

The invention relates to the design of equipment used for removal of impurities from conduits, and can be used for removal of solid deposits of internal surfaces of water-supply water-removal systems in the industry and municipal service system. A device contains a tubular housing, in front section of which a basic receiver is located, and in the rear section – an additional receiver with bypass openings.