

The interrelated group of inventions relates to the technology of removal of internal deposits from conduits and to the design of facilities used in this case. A method includes mechanical separation of deposits from the surface of conduit and removal thereof from the area of cleaning.