

The invention relates to units handling and growing bees, and more particularly to constructions of hives, in which combined bee families with two queens both in active and passive period of vital activity of bees can be kept. A hive includes bodies arranged vertically one above the other the upper of which are provided with honeycomb frames purposed for collecting honey, and the lower body is arranged on a support and provided with honeycomb frames purposed for forming nest parts of families each of which has own queen thereof.