

The invention relates to the device which can be fixed to a fuel-injection pump filling pistol. The device has a main stem, a head and a handle where main stem rear end with the head pistol rear end in the first connection on the filling pistol is connected and the head rear end with the pistol handle front end in the second connection on the filling pistol is connected where the mentioned device a display surface has which is supported by all-body for displaying one or more graphical messages light perceptible by pistol user where the means for providing possibility of disconnexion of the all-body to the filling pistol are created.