

The invention relates to food industry. Two fractions forming milk products, but with different fat content, are mixed in conditions when one of the fractions has the fat content less than the necessary fat content in the consumer milk to be produced, whereas the second has the fat content exceeding the necessary fat content in consumer milk to be produced, at that the mixing is carried out directly before the filling or during the filling consumer milk into the bags.